Curious Facts From

New Railroad Book

Two railroad books hit my desk simultaneously this morning. One is the new timetable of Missouri Pacific Lines, issued June 1, decorated with cover illustrations of the Diesel locomotives which are now pulling "Mop" passenger trains through Hope. The new timetable, incidentally, features Arkansas in text and pictures throughout its 20 pages.

The other publication is the Association of American Railroad Quizzes book, forwarded by the C.S. and L. & N. lines. This book tells you that: "The men who actually run the trains are only 2 per cent of the employees required to maintain a railroad. For every employee on wheels there are four working on tracks, in shops, or offices. Even on the actual train, the total number of employees varies greatly depending on the length of the run. A through train from Chicago to the West Coast, for instance, will take 30 to 40 employees by the time the different shifts are accounted for. Most railroad executives have come up from the ranks. Out of 49 executives 75 started in minor jobs, ranging from office boys to messengers, clerks, telegraphers, roadmen and laborers."

The last item has been chosen from the railroad's Quizzes book is an essay by the author of the most important item in railroad history. Early railroads in the United States used wooden rails capped with running strips of iron. The first iron rails, imported from England, were 18 feet long. By 1865 America was making its own steel rails. Today's standard rail is 45 feet long, although some roads use 40-foot rails, and even footers at street crossings. Formerly the standard length was 30 feet, eventually being lengthened to 36 feet. Today's rail averages 38.50 pounds per yard, against an average of 42.50 in 1921—and at the beginning of 1865 it averaged 30.50 pounds per yard, against an average of 28.50 pounds per yard.

The job is piece work. American political policy, as seen as American financial aid, seems to be making some impression in Greece. Reports from Athens state that government leaders are taking pains to squelch the extreme rightists among their supporters and to create the notion that those at the government helm are actually middle-of-the-roaders. Then, too, there is the agreement by which American experts, stationed in the Greek Cabinet departments, will keep track of the use of which every dollar of the American loan is spent. If the stories of the way some of the British aid to Greece was used are true, this agreement is highly important.

One of the worst things that could happen as the Truman Doctrine gets its first practical application, would be for the funds to be used for political purposes. Supporting a government which is neither wholly representative of the Greek people nor a model of democratic monarchy. It remains to be seen whether the Greek government has undertaken suppression of its far-right extremists. But at any rate, the government's obvious desire to look its most democratic friends in the arrival of American dollars and American representatives in Athens, has produced a slight change of heart. Much more encouraging would be the news that Greece is to hold new elections. This is an immediate possibility. But even the quiet election and voting process, promise of elections might help to End Greek affairs are as much of a mess as before. The civil war goes on. The Communists control the E.A.M. which, politically, is the only place for anti-government Greeks to go. They want to stay at home. Even administration reforms in the government has been put off until autumn.

Economically, American aid can do Greece no harm. Politically, there doesn't seem much hope until the civil war is ended, its foreign instigators driven out, and a representative government elected. This also seems to be a part of America's job in Greece, if it found its critics by doing what it should.

The announcement of new elections should come from the Greek government alone. But American insistence should legitimately be behind it. And the American government should take some responsibility for the honesty of those elections. This would not be interference or imperialism. Rather, it would be an effort to insure those "free and unfettered elections" which the Potsdam Declaration decreed for Poland, but which didn't come off.

The Arctic Defense Draws Jibe From Russia
Moscow, June 28 — (UP)—Pravda published a four-column editorial today, castigating American Arctic defense. It was headed: "Eisenhower defends himself." The cartoon depicted Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower at the head of a new Eskimo mechanized army facing across Canada a new Eskimo mechanized army. American citizens are being deceived, the editorial said, by the fact that the Eskimo is doing and he is represented as "helping." Can't you see what hostile forces are concentrated here? Right here is where America's freedom is being threatened."

11 Money Bills Sent to Truman by Congress

By JOHN L. STEELE
Washington, June 28 — (UP)—Congress today sent President Truman 11 money bills, including the new fiscal year just closed. The measure sent to the White House was a $12,402,088,071 grant for the treasury and post office department. It was some $200,000 short of the president's "mini budget" request. Other appropriations bills still are being considered by the House and Senate. The measure sent to the White House was a $12,402,088,071 grant for the treasury and post office department. 11 Money Bills Sent to Truman by Congress

By JOHN L. STEELE

Washington, June 28 — (UP) — Congress today sent President Truman 11 money bills, including the new fiscal year just closed.

The measure sent to the White House was a $12,402,088,071 grant for the treasury and post office departments. It was some $200,000 short of the president's "mini budget" request. Other appropriations bills still are being considered by the House and Senate.

To make certain that Congress' failure to act before July 1, would not curtail the salaries of government employees and benefits to veterans, the Senate approved with the House a resolution authorizing departments to keep spending at present rates until their appropriations are completed.

Chairman Styles Bridges, R., N. H., of the Appropriations Committee, explained that departments were authorized to keep spending at present rates until their appropriations are completed.

The bill sent to Mr. Truman authorized the following sums for operating expenses: Treasury, $1,855,000,000; post office, $1,855,000,000; Treasury also was granted a permanent appropriation of some $1,855,000,000 which includes funds for interest payments on the public debt.

Meanwhile, the Senate Appropriations Committee moved to suspend an all-out fight on the Senate floor for the fiscal year 1948. The Senate Department's "Voice of America" foreign broadcasts.

The job is piece work. American political policy, as well as American financial aid, seems to be making some impression in Greece. Reports from Athens state that government leaders are taking pains to squelch the extreme rightists among their supporters and to create the notion that those at the government helm are actually middle-of-the-roaders.

Then, too, there is the agreement by which American experts, stationed in the Greek Cabinet departments, will keep track of the use of which every dollar of the American loan is spent. If the stories of the way some of the British aid to Greece was used are true, this agreement is highly important.

One of the worst things that could happen, as the Truman Doctrine gets its first practical application, would be for the funds to be used for political purposes. Supporting a government which is neither wholly representative of the Greek people nor a model of democratic monarchy.

It remains to be seen whether the Greek government has undertaken the suppression of its far-right extremists. But at any rate, the government's obvious desire to look its most democratic friends in the arrival of American dollars and American representatives in Athens is a slight change of heart.

Much more encouraging would be the news that Greece is to hold new elections. This is an immediate possibility. But even the quiet election and voting process, promise of elections might help to stabilize the situation.

Existing Greek affairs are as much of a mess as the civil war goes on. The Communists control the EAM, which, politically, is the only place for anti-government Greeks to go. They want to stay at home. Even the administration reforms in the government has been put off until autumn.

Economically, American aid can't do much for Greece. Politically, there doesn't seem much hope until the civil war is ended, its foreign instigators driven out, and a representative government elected.

This also seems to be a part of America's job in Greece, if it is to find its critics by doing what it can.

The announcement of new elections should come from the Greek government alone. But American insistence should legitimately be behind it. And the American government should take some responsibility for the honesty of those elections.

This would not be interference or imperialism. Rather, it would be an effort to insure those "free and unfettered elections" which the Potsdam Declaration decreed for Poland, but which didn't come off.

The auto industry involves "public interest" because of its vast weight in the economy. But its shutdown would not immediately endanger the national health or safety.

For phrasing appears to block intervention in most strikes which affect a single city or company.

Alarant strike: strikes involving industrial bargaining, such as a local basis like the building trades, usually have no direct national impact. It was headlined: "Eisenhower defends himself."

Law Designed to Smoke Out Communists
 (Editor's Note: This is the first of six stories explaining main points in the new labor law.)

By STERLING F. GREEN
 Washington, June 27.—The new labor law is designed to smoke out communists from the labor movement. It is the first time in the history of the United States that a law has been enacted to do this.

The law does not ban Communists from unions. But, in effect, it forces them from holding union office. It is a union officer who is the Communist, his union loses its rights to represent the workers.

These rights are numerous and present union strength. Under the new law a boss has to bargain with the union. He must accept the union's demands. He must not discriminate against union members.

President Truman when he vetoed the labor bill predicted that it would happen. He said this section of the new law could increase the disruptive effect of Communists in the labor movement.

There is another political section of the bill. It gives the federal government the right to investigate and control the activities of any group which is engaged in subversive activities.

The United States has agreed to sell Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek 100,000 rounds of surplus rifle ammunition. This is the first time in the history of the United States that such a large quantity of surplus ammunition has been sold to a foreign government.

The bulk of the money for the sale of the ammunition is to be used by the Chinese government to purchase American goods. This is the first time in the history of the United States that such a large quantity of surplus ammunition has been sold to a foreign government.

U. S. to Join International Refugee Group
 Washington, June 27.—(AP)—The United States will soon become the newest member of the International Refugee Organization, formed to care for some 800,000 persons made homeless by the war in Europe.

Only minor differences separated the House and Senate today on bills authorizing the sale of surplus ammunition to the Chinese government. The House bill provides for the sale of 100,000 rounds of surplus rifle ammunition to the Chinese government.

DOROTHY DIX Vacation for Mother

This is the time of the year when every mother gets vacation. And if any member of the family does happen to notice that mother is looking a little better, it is because she has had a good vacation. The woman who said that she would never have a vacation, because she was too busy, is now a vacationer. She has had a good vacation. She has had a good vacation. She has had a good vacation.

But nobody thinks that Mother needs a break in her routine when she has had a vacation. She has had a good vacation. She has had a good vacation. She has had a good vacation. She has had a good vacation. She has had a good vacation.
